

BURLINGTON FREE PRESS, FRIDAY MORNING, JUNE 16, 1848.

The N. Y. Globe (Barnburner) says:—
"Lewis Cass will want from fifty to one hundred thousand votes of carrying New York!"

Poor Lewis!
A Western paper has commenced the publication of Cass's letter to the Chicago International Improvement Convention—be completed in two or three numbers!

GEN. CASS OUT WEST.

The Racine (Wisconsin) Advocate (locofoco) concludes an article on the nomination of the unfortunate Mr. Lewis Cass in the following significant terms:—

"The only likely hope for his nomination may be made by disunion. We do not wish to look upon as such a mistake of a but not so great a one as success under such circumstances."

Correspondence of the N. O. Picayune.

GEN. TAYLOR TAKEN PRISONER.

IVERVILLE, May 25, 1848.

The good people of Ierville have been in expectation of some days, created by an unexpected visit from Gen. Taylor, he having promised to call on some of his numerous friends in that parish and partake of their distinguished hospitality. Quietly and unheralded, accompanied by D. A. Avery, Esq., he presented himself yesterday at noon, (Tuesday) at the residence of J. Brown, Esq., where he partook of a sumptuous dinner, and then proceeded to the house of a warm personal friend, Col. R. A. Stewart, where he established himself for the day. The Gen. is in remarkable fine health, and since his return to the States, has not been ill. He came out in a new suit of black, it seems as if he had turned back the wheels of time and stricken the marks of ten years from his capacious brow. We can form some slight idea by attentively studying his face how it looked when lighted up by the excitement of battle; but yesterday, as he wended his way along, with the broad bosom of the Mississippi on the one side and the luminous fields of cane on the other, we thought that the evidence of peace gave a far more glorious expression to his countenance than even the bloom of the flush of a glorious "vict'ry" could. In fact, Gen. Taylor is as bold and resolute in the quiet pursuits of agricultural life; it is passing strange how entirely he puts off his armor when "off duty." In this respect he has no prototype, except in the great man he resembles in so many other points; Washington, the Father of his Country.

It so happened that on the very evening of the arrival of Gen. Taylor, Col. Stewart's house was lit up, until it seemed to be one blaze of light, and within its precincts was heard the sound of revelry. The patriot's youngest daughter had a few hours before stood at the bridal altar and hundreds of relatives and admiring friends were gayly and joyously celebrating the event. The rumor went through the crowd that Gen. Taylor had arrived in the neighborhood.— The beautiful bride, the troupe of bride's maid—the whole circle of Louisiana's fairest daughters, that graced the festive scene, hoped the arrival of the General, and when he did, spontaneously gave vent to their feelings of admiration. In a few moments the ladies formed a plant to capture the old hero." They felt confident that they could do what Santa Anna and twenty thousand picked troops could not. Miss —, Miss —, and Miss —, three lovely young ladies were at once organized into a powerful army supported by several gentlemen. It was agreed that the ladies should get into Dr. Pritchard's carriage, the gentlemen into the "grand march" and the maidens into the "military escort." The affair was entirely successful; the light artillery got on to the gallery of the house unperceived, as it was raining very hard at the time, and boldly entering the sally port, carried old Zack in fifteen seconds. At the time he was firmly seated in a large red backed arm chair, Col. Stewart supporting him on the right, his accomplished hand on the left. The General on the first seat, and the maidens in the rear, were a total failure; the dress was torn, the skirt was cut, and the ladies were scattered on the floor. The Master of Ceremonies was prepared, and by the now popular name of "Gen. Taylor's entourage" (Col. Stewart's house) and carry it by a coupe de main.
